

Do your pet's kisses smell like the underside of the Blarney Stone?

It could be time for a dental exam and cleaning!!

Bad breath is not normal for pets!!! The most common sign associated with dental disease is bad breath. You may also notice loose teeth and inflamed gums; your pet may drop food or become head shy. Inadequate oral health in our pets leads to periodontal disease, which left untreated causes:

- Chronic pain from infection and inflammation
- Decreased quality of life
- Decreased appetite and weight loss
- Tooth loss due to loss of supporting tissues around teeth
- Distant organ (e.g., liver, kidneys, heart valves) damage from bacterial infection

There is a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow!!

During the month of March,
all dental cleanings will be 10% off the regular price.
+++IN ADDITION+++
Nail trims and anal gland expression at no additional charge with this special

Cats need care too!!!

Dental disease is a common incidental finding during your kitty's wellness exam. Symptoms associated with dental disease are easily missed in cats since they hide their pain so well. The diagnosis is made when your veterinarian examines your cat's mouth during a wellness exam.

Because our pets do not simply lie back in the dentist's chair like we do, your pet must undergo general anesthesia to examine your pet's mouth thoroughly and clean the teeth. Buildup on the teeth is removed using special dental tools. The surface of the teeth is smoothed over by polishing.

<<<<<<BEFORE

AFTER>>>>>>

